CONSTANCY.
My soul is like a dark deep sea,
With one broad track of liquid light;
And like the moon thy love for me,
That traces there a path so bright.
And yet I would not that the moon
Should always prove a smile;
For she is fickle, and full soon
Will smile upon another sea.
No! rather be it like the skill
Which traces, with a sculptor's hand,
An image on my heart, that still
Through every change of life may stand;
So deeply graven there that Time
Shall fail to ever obliterate;
So perfect, that to move one line
The heart and image both must break.
—Jane Galley.

(FROM THE EVENING MAIL.)
The Walworths.

Editor of THE EVENING MAIL:
DEAR SIR—Several years ago, while engaged as the Saratoga correspondent of THE EVENING MAIL, I wrote a short notice of "Warwick" in one of my letters, which is the best of poor Walworth's astonishing novels. It was at that time the height of the "season," and young ladies and gentlemen alternated between dressing, drinking the "waters," dancing, and reading "Warwick." In order to be in the fashion, I also took to the springs, the ball-rooms, and the book. On the principle that a prophet is not without honor save in his own country, Walworth was most bitterly denounced by the readers of his own town. One of these was a young lady who wished me to inform her who Humboldt was? To which I replied that he was the great discoverer of Buchu. Imagining, therefore, that people were inclined to be too hard upon the novelist, I wrote the kindest notice of the book possible. This Mr. Walworth read and then called upon me at the American Hotel. From that time we got to be very intimate and some of the evenings spent at the old homestead were among the pleasantest of my life's recollections. Both Mr. and Mrs. Walworth were among the most hospitable and intellectually agreeable of people. Even the little children were unusually winning, and from this little circle no one could possibly dream that such a person as the present occupant of the Tombs, could by any possibility spring. Often, of a warm afternoon, we all reclined upon the sward beneath the aged whispering pines in the rear of the homestead, and discussed literature, philosophy and religion—the little girls and boys oftentimes apparently as much interested as ourselves. At this time Walworth was in the habit of taking long walks, (on which expeditions I sometimes accompanied him); he informed me that some time previous his life was endangered by an attack of softening of the brain—the doctors informing him that his only hope was in constant outdoor exercise and an entire cessation of literary labor. It was previous to my acquaintance with him that his dissipated peculiarities had been manifested, and from that time till now he was one of the most industrious writers—the past year, as he informed me, being remarkable as the hardest working year of his life. In all my acquaintance with Mr. Walworth I have only known him as one of the most unassuming and affable of men, though he was almost universally represented in Saratoga as a very unprincipled man. This however, I was inclined to treat with great caution, knowing (as I once stated in a letter from Saratoga to the Home Journal), that the town was one of the most complete and perfect hot-beds of impure scandal that I ever lived in—the vice, too, seeming to be mostly confined to the higher circles. There is no doubt in my mind, judging from his novels and his astonishing career, both of which sometimes remind me of the unfortunate Edgar Poe (of whom Walworth was an enthusiastic admirer), that he was at times entirely irresponsible for his actions. Mrs. Walworth is one of the most refined and intelligent of ladies, though not literary—that is further than the manifestation of an ardent love of books. The children are all remarkably precocious and interesting. Undoubtedly the unfortunate young assassin was impelled by a love for his mother, but instead of killing his ill-fated father, both he and his mother should have preferred a charge of insanity against the offender and produced the letters which he is said to have written to Mrs. Walworth, in evidence. As the case now stands, the son has stepped his soul in guilt of the most appalling magnitude, and plunged his family into a disgrace compared with which any former stains were as drops of water.

Society and Fashion.

The hair is worn pretty snarly about the face.

Mousseline ribbon wears better than gros grain, females say.

Some New York belles are wearing suits of Turkish toweling.

Powdered hair is again in fashion. Blonde and white are the favorite styles.

Bonnet and jockeys are suspended at some distance over the wearer's head.

Fancy jewelry is much worn on the street again, which is in very bad taste.

Wide and very long sashes of colored grenadine will be worn this summer.

Materials formed of alternate stripes of satin and velvet are very fashionable for skirts.

Colored ribbons about the neck, with a bow in front with diamonds thereon, are much worn in full dress.

The ladies are wearing what is known as the snow-ball veil. It is of black lace, dotted with white, and very becoming.

Unaired Chambers.
The following sensible advice is given us by a correspondent in the Country Gentleman:
"I pass some houses in every town whose windows might as well be sealed in with the walls for any purpose they have but to let in the light. They are never opened, summer or winter. In winter it is too cold; in the summer the flies stray in, or, if they are netted, the dust sifts through the nets. Now, I can tell a person who inhabits such chambers when I pass him in the street—there is such a smell about his clothing. I always wish for a sniff of cologne, or hartshorn, or burnt feathers, or something of that sort, to 'take the taste out.' A house that is never aired has every nook and corner filled with stale odors of cooked meats, boiled vegetables, especially cabbage and onions, which, as the weeks go by, literally reek in their hiding places."
"Who has not wished sometimes to hang a new servant's clothing out of doors some frosty night until it should be thoroughly aired? But I have seen the fine ladies come sweeping into church with their velvet and silks, when said velvet and silks gave unmistakable evidence of having been housed in just such shut-up chambers. Oh, what a tale that odor of pork and cabbage tells about the lady's style of housekeeping! The very garments of the children tell the same story of uncleanness. It is bad to have unwashed clothes, but there may be an excuse for it. But what excuse can there be for unaired ones, when air is so cheap and free? There is death in such unaired chambers. Better a swarm of flies or a cloud of dust, better frost and snow in a room, than these intolerable smells. Dear girls, the first thing in the morning, when you are ready to go down stairs, throw open your windows, take apart the clothing of your beds, and let the air blow through it as hard as it will. It helps to keep away the doctors with long bills. It helps to make your eyes sparkle and to make your cheeks glow, and to make others love your presence. Girls who live in those close, shut-up rooms, can only be tolerated at the best in any circle."
